Description of Property and Eligibility Determination (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

The c. 1925 Bungalow style house has a front gable dormer and a screened in porch. The roofing material appears to be asphalt shingles and a four-step stone stoop leads up to the porch. The house siding appears to have been altered with the introduction of aluminum or vinyl siding and the dormer is sided with wood shingles.

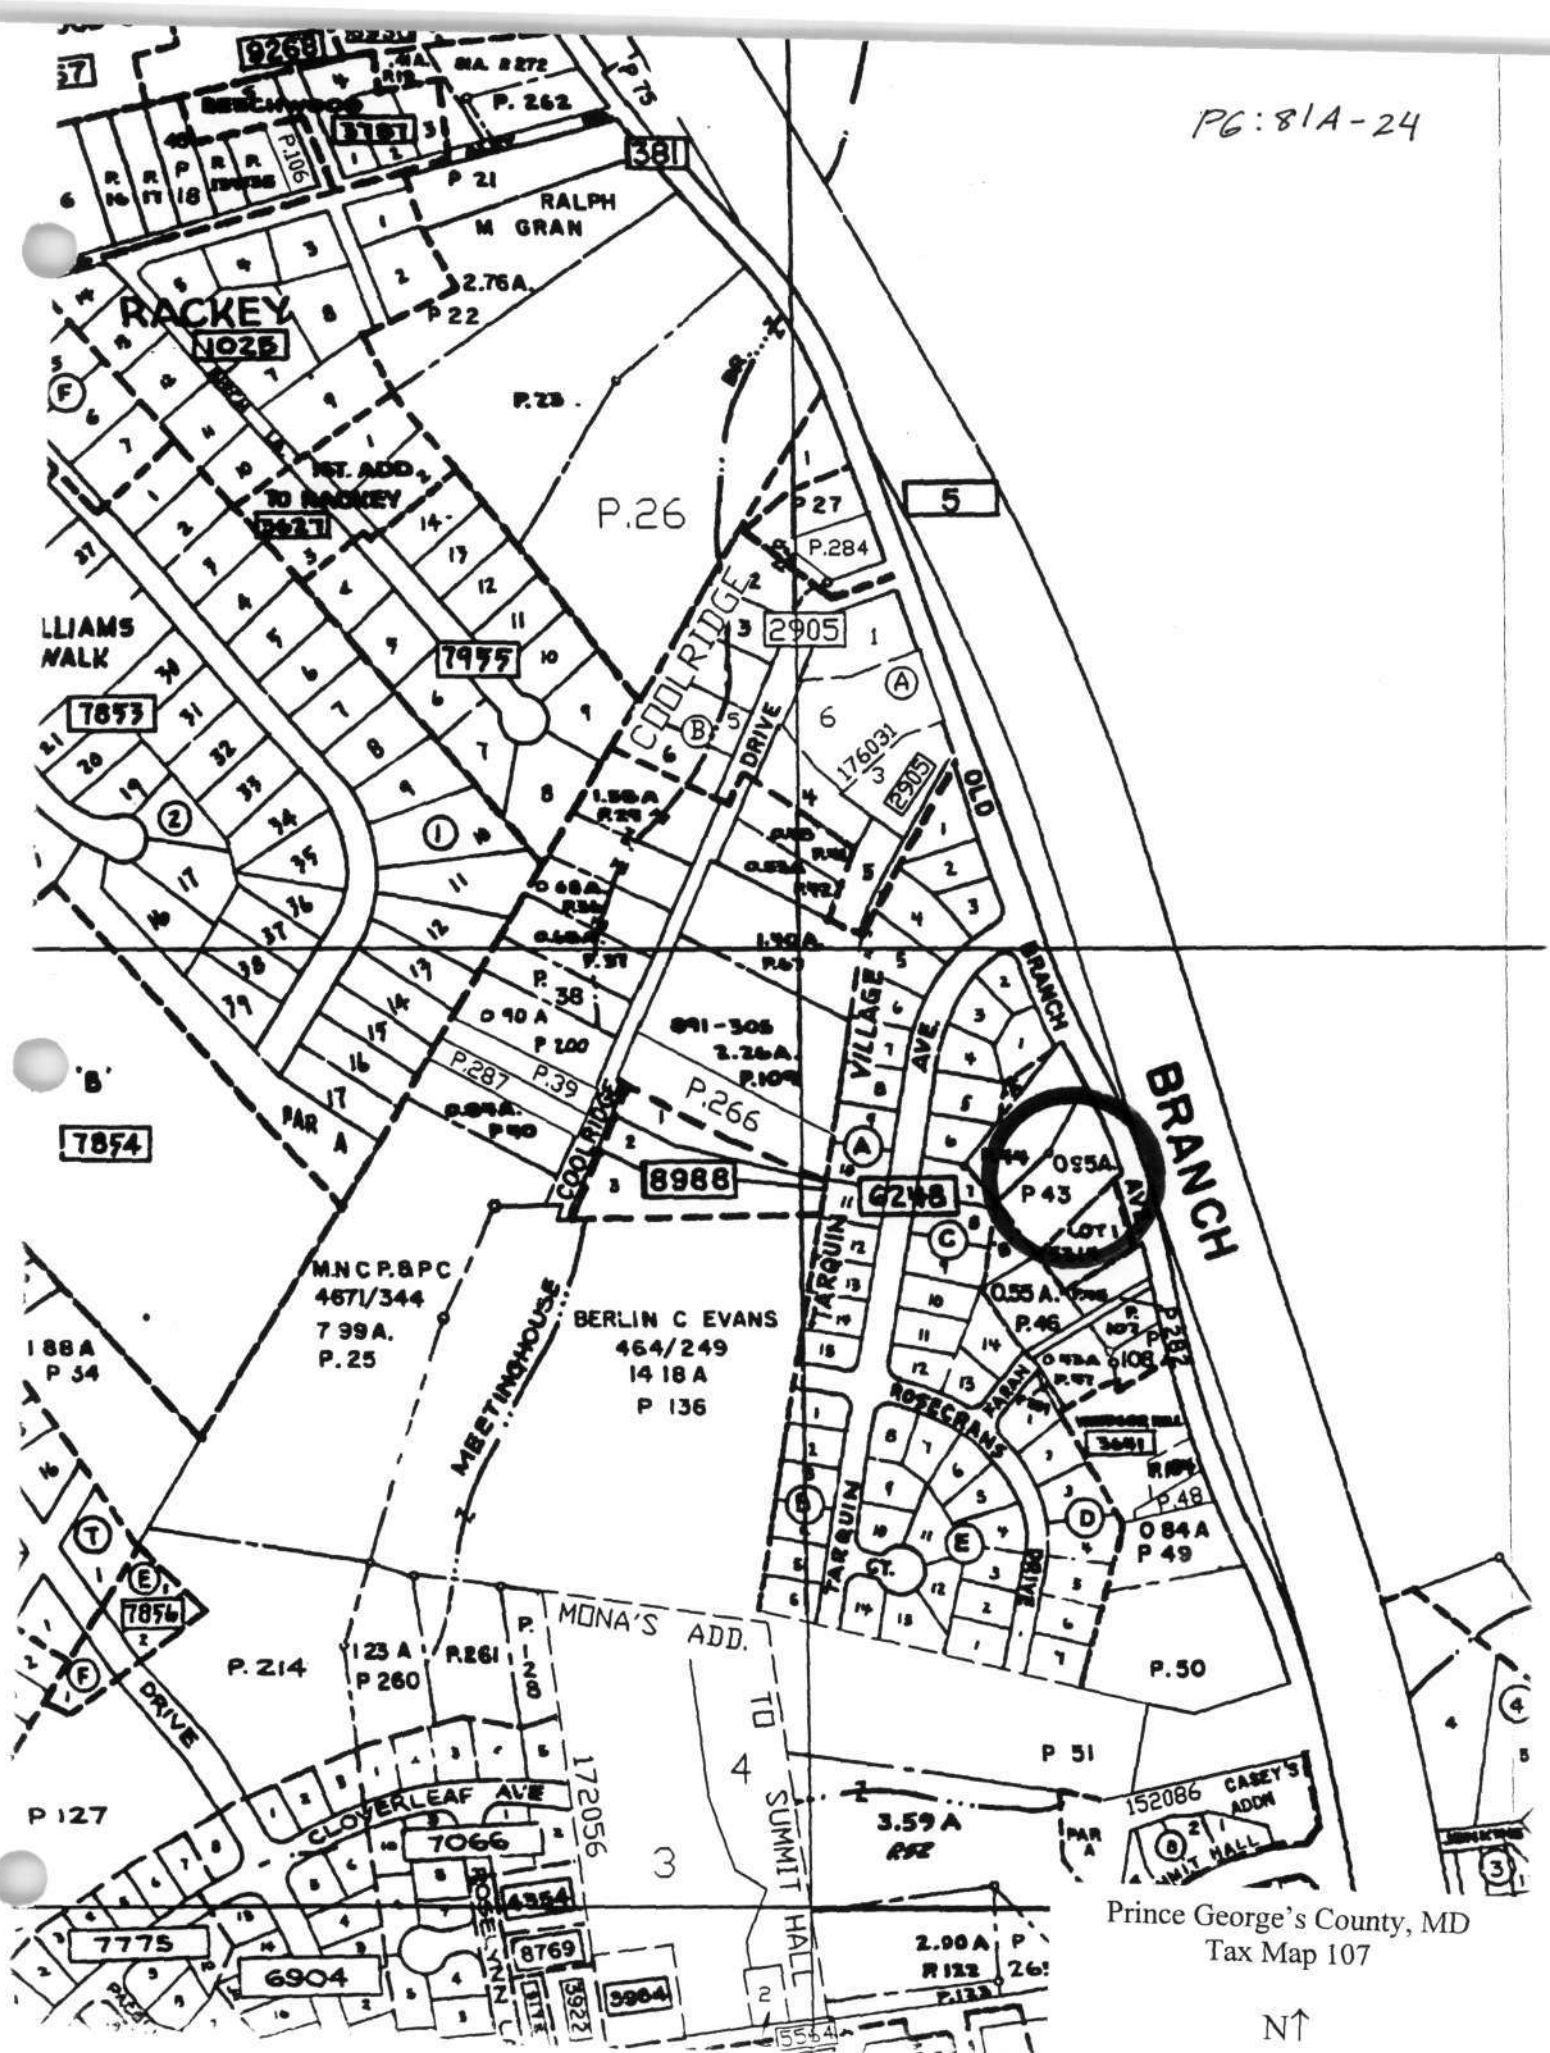

The years leading up to World War II in Prince George's County saw an increase in the population due to the close proximity of the northern portion of the county to the nation's capital. The county's population increased from 60,000 to 90,000 between 1930 and 1940. The establishment of Andrews Air Force Base in 1942 led to both military and civilian developments. The automobile allowed expansion beyond the traditional town design and as the post-World War II era progressed, new road construction resulted in the suburbanization of the previously sparsely-settled portions of northern Prince George's County. Maryland Route 5 (Branch Avenue), constructed in 1950, served as a major artery around the western edge of Andrews Air Force Base. By 1950, Prince George's County's population had risen to 193,799 persons, more than double the population of ten years earlier.

The c. 1925 bungalow is not eligible for the National Register. While it is typical of the Bungalow style residential design seen in the northern sections of Prince George's County, the resource lacks significance related to events, persons, or architecture. Criterion D, information potential, was not assessed for this study.
